

National Survey of Service Providers Working with People Experiencing Homelessness: Preliminary Findings from Week 1

On November 12, 2020, researchers at the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health (CAMH) launched an online survey to examine the mental health and well-being of direct service providers working with people experiencing homelessness in Canada.

This is what we've heard so far.

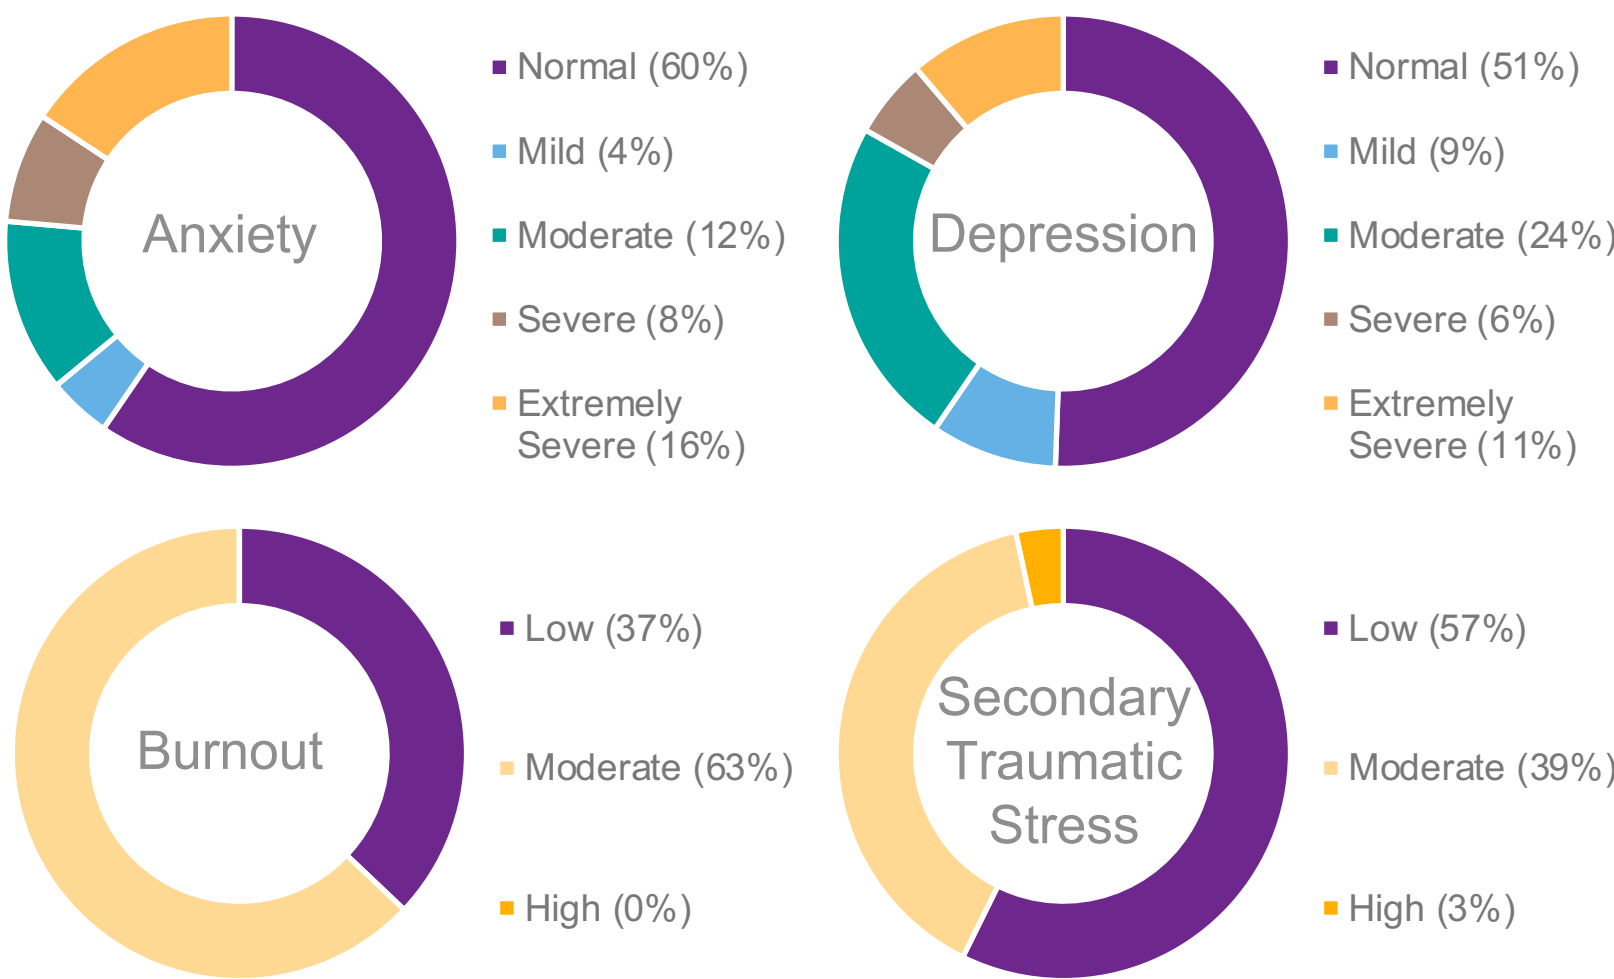

Who Have We Heard From?

What Are the Effects of the COVID-19 Pandemic?

What Are Service Providers Experiencing?

What's Next for the Study?

Recruitment for the online survey is ongoing. If you provide direct services to people experiencing homelessness, please share your voice and perspective for this research.

We especially want to hear from service providers in the Prairies, the North, and Eastern Canada.

We want to hear from more people who work in the harm reduction sector.

This study is being led by Drs. Sean Kidd (primary investigator) and Nick Kerman.
