

Are you a direct service provider working with people experiencing homelessness?

We want to hear from you for a study on workforce mental health and well-being

Study Objective: This study is examining the mental health and support needs of direct service providers working in the homeless, supportive housing, and harm reduction sectors in Canada.

We are inviting direct service providers who work with people with histories of homelessness to participate in an online survey as part of the study.

Study Investigators: Drs. Sean Kidd (principal investigator) and Nick Kerman of the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health (CAMH).

Eligibility Criteria: To participate in the study, you must:

- Be 18 years of age or older
- Work in Canada
- Be a direct service provider to people who are currently or formerly homeless (i.e., your work involves seeing or meeting regularly with people who are currently or formerly homeless)
- Work in either the homeless, supportive housing, or harm reduction service sectors

The survey can be accessed online at the following address:
